Thursdays, 11:00-14:00h
Room 18.1.A01

INTRODUCTION

The course offers a general introduction to contemporary sociological analysis, understood as the attempt to produce scientific explanations of social phenomena. It will address and discuss the main problems in advanced sociological theory from an analytical point of view. The focus will be on contemporary problems and discussions that are relevant for social scientists when trying to explain general and particular social processes, patterns, and interactions. The course will adopt an interdisciplinary approach. The topics of the sessions will include epistemological problems of the social sciences, theoretical models of social action and interaction, and explanatory models of particular types of social phenomena, as well as empirical examples.

ASSESSMENT

The assessment will consist in two different elements, weighted equally (50% each). First, students will prepare presentations in class of the assigned readings for each session, followed by a discussion. Each student will be asked to present and minimally discuss one of the texts (or two depending on the session). The topics and schedule of the presentations will be agreed during the first two sessions of the course. Second, a brief individual essay (2000 words) discussing the topic of the session in which each student has presented. Active participation in class discussions based on assigned readings will also count significantly for the final assessment.

SCHEDULE AND READINGS

Each session will address a relevant topic for contemporary sociological analysis. Specific readings are assigned for each session. The readings will be the basis of class presentations and debates, and will be made available to students on-line. The discussions will be preceded by a systematic introductory lecture which will offer an overview of the topic of each session. Additional complementary readings will be suggested during the course and on demand.

(When the readings are chapters from the basic reference texts, the complete reference is included in the list above).

Session 1 (20 September)

Theories and models in social science. Sociological theories: a typology. Types of explanation in the social sciences. Sociological explanation and social mechanisms. Introduction to the micro-macro problem.

Elster, J. (2007), chapters 1 (“Explanation”) and 2 (“Mechanisms”).
Hedström, P. (2005), chapter 2 (“Social mechanisms and explanatory theory”).

Session 2 (27 September)

Social institutions and social ontology. Different rival approaches on the nature of social phenomena. The debate on ‘social construction’. Structure vs. action.

Searle, J. (2005), “What is an institution?”, Journal of Institutional Economics, 1(1): 1-22.
Guala, F. (2016), Understanding Institutions, Princeton, Princeton University Press.
Chapters 1 (“Introduction”), 2 (“Rules”), and 6 (“Constitution”).

Session 3 (11 October)

Intentional explanation and its problems. Interpretation vs explanation. Rational choice, DBO theory, and rival approaches. Rationality and the theory of social action.

Elster, J. (2007), Chapter 3 (“Interpretation”) and pp. 67-74 (“The Mind”).
