Objectives:

The objective of this advanced course is to familiarize the students with the analysis and discussion of advanced topics in political economy. We will explore in detail some of the current debates on inequality, populism, failures of representation, democratic backsliding and the sources/lack of political mobilization. The students will be exposed to advanced academic research that is analyzing the sources of political polarization, the rise of authoritarianism and the challenges to the welfare state. At the same time, however, the objective is to expand the students' analytical skills. The ultimate goal is to ensure that students recognize, understand and can contribute to contemporaneous debates on the political economy of electoral democracy.

Methodology

There will be a final short paper to be handed in by the end of the course but participation in class will be also evaluated. The short paper will count 50% of the final mark and participation in class the other 50%. Moreover, during the course every student will need to do one referee report (instructions will follow) for an assigned reading and one presentation (instructions to follow as well). There will be 2 required readings for every session, although the program also includes further recommended readings. The students are expected to read the required readings and to be able to discuss them.

Main Topics:

1. Failures of representation in modern democracies
2. Turnout, mobilization and disaffection
3. The role of geography and spatial politics
